Each dot represents one person by their racial/ethnic identity:

- African American
- Asian American
- Hispanic American
- Native American
- White American
- Multiracial or Another Race

One dot represents one person, assigned a color by race/ethnicity. Population density and race and ethnicity shown by census block group, and randomly distributed geographically within each block group. Population within each block group only assigned to areas with a residential land use classification on the Metropolitan Council 2016 land use classifications, or alternately specific college campuses coded as institutional in land use classifications but known to have a residential population. Data from American Community Survey 2012-2016, table B03002 and Saint Paul Department of Planning & Economic Development analysis. In order to visualize race and ethnicity using Census data, a decision must be made about how to combine key ethnicities (Hispanic/Latino) with the remaining racial classifications tracked by the Census Bureau. Research underscores most who are likely to identify as Hispanic or Latino people consider that their primary identity. As such, we count people who would identify as ethnically Hispanic/Latino people as Hispanic/Latino, regardless of race. Because of especially small population size in Saint Paul, Native Hawaiian and Pacific Islanders category folded into Asian category. Racial and ethnic names simplified for ease of public identification and consumption. District del Sol photo courtesy Tony Ernst under CC-BY-SA 2.0 license via bit.ly/2qDQCFN.
